1. The Deutsche Wirtschaftsgesellschaft (DWG) was founded by the SED sometime in 1950 to handle foreign trade for the purpose of engaging in illegal trade which could not be handled through the overt branches of the DIA organization. The DIA's were directly subordinate to the Ministry for Foreign and Domestic Trade. The DWG is an independent, SED-sponsored, unaffiliated organization. It is independent of the DIA organization, but bound by certain regulations on trading issued by the Ministry for Foreign and Domestic Trade. DWG soon gained a reputation for illegal trading and business transactions, the nature of which would have been compromising for the DIA's. The DWG makes its own sales and purchase contracts independently of any other East German office or ministry, does its own exporting, and conducts a considerable export business with the Soviet Vneshtorg firms, such as Tekhnopromimport, which was formerly handled through the DIA's.
2. ~~Since~~ 1950 DWG has handled all orders placed by the Soviets for import into the USSR of business machines produced by the plants under VEB Polygraph. These machines were ordered by Tekhnopromimport. During the last 12 months, very few such orders have been received by the supplier plants, indicating a tapering off of Soviet requirements.
3. The DWG is badly handicapped in its business dealings with both supplier and customer firms by the lack of technically qualified personnel on its staff. This is particularly noticeable in the Polygraph Department, headed by Neubert (fnu). Neubert is cognizant of his own lack of technical knowledge and has refused to employ experienced technical people because he knows that he would suffer badly by comparison. From the time when the DWG was ~~into~~ founded until about 1952, repeated offers were made to specialists in the business and industrial machine fields to accept employment with this office, but qualified personnel consistently refused to be associated with the DWG because of the bad reputation it had already gained in the export field.
